The Art Gallery of Ontario

Sixty Years of Exhibitions, 1906-1966

KAREN MCKENZIE AND LARRY PFAFF

Art Gallery of Ontario

Incorporated in 1900 as the Art Museum of Toronto, the Gallery was the third art museum founded in Canada.¹ Its early development was slow, for not until 1912 did it occupy premises of its own in the Grange, bequeathed to the Museum by Goldwin Smith (Fig. 1). Exhibition activity had already begun, however, in borrowed premises: the galleries of the Ontario Society of Artists² at 165 King Street West in Toronto were the site of the first exhibition in 1906, while the Public Reference Library building at College and St. George Streets was used from 1909 on. The first exhibition held in the Grange in June 1913 was, appropriately, of the donor's collection. Thereafter, until the construction of the first galleries in 1918, exhibitions were held both in the Public Library and in the Grange. These three south galleries were inaugurated by a joint exhibition of the Ontario Society of Artists and the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts, and, with their first exhibition there in 1920, became the battleground of the early days of the Group of Seven. In 1919, the Art Museum of Toronto became the Art Gallery of Toronto, the name it carried until 1966. In 1924, exhibition space was enlarged yet again with the construction of a sculpture court, two sets of flanking galleries (Fig. 2), and a new entrance on Dundas Street. In 1935, two more galleries were opened, completing the premises of the Art Gallery as it would stand for the next thirty-nine years, until the opening in 1974 of a major addition and the Moore Centre.

From its foundation, brought about by the efforts of the Ontario Society of Artists, the Gallery has been closely linked with the private collectors and artists of Toronto. The first exhibition organized by the Gallery itself (the second loan exhibition, 1909) was drawn exclusively from the private collections of the city. This relationship flourished during succeeding decades, reinforced by periodic donations of works of art and of funds – the 1955 bequest of Frank P. Wood, for example, which included two portraits by Frans Hals and Rembrandt's Lady with a Lap Dog. Especially in its early years, the Gallery relied heavily on the resources of private collections for loans to temporary exhibitions and to fill out the hangings of its own permanent collection. Little Pictures by Canadian Artists (1913) marked the beginning of the Gallery's policy to exhibit local work, a tradition retained into the early 1960s with the regular showing in the Print Room of small groups of Young Canadians. As early as 1918 and continuing into the 'fifties, annual exhibitions of student work from the Ontario College of Art were held. Gradually, however, the Toronto mandate gave way to a wider sphere of interest, a change officially recognized in 1966 with the adoption of the name Art Gallery of Ontario.

At different times in its history, the Gallery joined forces in its exhibition programme with a small number of other museums: in Canada, the National Gallery of Canada and the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts, and, in the United States, the Albright-Knox Art Gallery in Buffalo and the Toledo Museum of Art. The Museum's first exhibition, Pictures by the Glasgow Painters (1906), was organized by the (then) Albright Art Museum. During subsequent years, a number of important exhibitions originating in Buffalo were held in Toronto – the collection of Carl W. Hamilton in 1927, the Great Lakes Exhibition in 1939, British Contemporary Painters in 1947, and Paintings Looted from Holland in 1948. In the 1940s, co-operation with Toledo produced such exhibitions as Chilean Contemporary Art (1942), Masterpieces from the Cook Collection, Richmond, Surrey (1945), The Spirit of modern France ... 1745-1946 (1947), as well as Two Cities Collect (1948). Links with Ottawa and Montreal were the natural outgrowth of a relationship between Canada's first three art museums and of geographical proximity; they were also virtually a necessity for the Art Gallery of Toronto at a time when its own permanent collection was sparse. Loans from the collections of the National Gallery were generous from the moment that a small selection of drawings was shown in the Grange in 1916. Many notable exhibitions, jointly organized, travelled between Ottawa, Toronto, and Montreal, beginning in 1938 with the James Wilson Morrice memorial exhibition and continuing through the 1940s to Toulouse-Lautrec in 1953, Paintings by European Masters in 1954, David Milne in 1955, and so on. In the 'sixties, this co-operative spirit receded in the face of such independently organized 'blockbuster' exhibitions as Picasso and Man (1964). As well, relationships with museums outside of North America were fostered from this point on.

Most Canadian artists' societies made Toronto their initial headquarters and, as soon as exhibition space was available, made the Gallery the home of their annual exhibitions (Fig. 3). For many years this was a happy marriage: the societies, covering a wide spectrum of artistic activity, were in their heyday; the Gallery was firmly committed to participation on a local level. Society exhibitions were exceedingly popular, not only with the public, but with the many artists for whom the societies were the sole opportunity to exhibit. The 1910 exhibition programme consisted entirely of two society shows – the third annual exhibition of the Canadian Art Club and the thirty-eighth of the Ontario Society of Artists. This was the beginning of the 'Society Annuals.' In the following year, they were joined by both the Canadian Society of Applied Art and the Royal Canadian Academy. In 1912, the Toronto Society of Architects was added. In 1914 came the debut of the Canadian Society of Etchers under the name Toronto Etchers. By 1917, the Toronto Camera Club, too, had arrived with its twenty-sixth annual exhibition (and fourteenth salon). Also in that year, the O.S.A. membership held the first of its 'small picture' exhibitions. In 1919, the Society of Canadian Painter-Etchers (formerly the Society of Etchers and later the Society of Canadian Painter-Etchers and Engravers) held its first annual show, while the Society of Graphic Art arrived in 1924. The Canadian Society of painters in Water Colour (C.S.P.W.C.) first exhibited in 1926. During the 'forties, several craftsmen's societies joined the ranks. The crowning moment came in 1950, the Gallery's jubilee year, with ten societies joining forces to present Contemporary Canadian Arts. By the late 'fifties, however, the bloom had begun to fade. The R.C.A. had for a number of years alternated its annual exhibition between Montreal and Toronto; in 1966 it had its final appearance at the Gallery. Wanting to be more representative of Canada as a whole, other national societies began to circulate their annual exhibitions to a variety of places. The C.S.P.W.C. held its last annual at the Gallery in 1967 and the C.S.G.A. in 1963. The O.S.A., since its final exhibition at the Gallery in 1967, has travelled throughout Ontario.

By honouring the work of A.H. Howard in 1916, the Gallery instituted a series of memorial exhibitions for Canadian artists which included Tom Thomson (1920 and 1941, Fig. 4), F. McGillivray Knowles (1932), J.W. Morrice (1938), C.W. Jefferys (1952), and many others (Fig. 5). In 1920 was mounted the first of six exhibitions devoted to the work of the Group of Seven. (It is easy, in retrospect, to forget that the work of the Group was largely unaccepted at this time and that there was a certain daring on the part of the Art Gallery of Toronto in sponsoring it (Fig. 6). By and large, they designed their own catalogues, and the one for the Group's fifth exhibition, in 1926, has a handsome cover signed by Thoreau MacDonald.) In 1932, the Canadian Group of Painters, which considered itself 'a direct outgrowth of the Group of Seven,' held its first exhibition at the Gallery. All of these exhibitions helped to encourage and foster the idea of a distinctive Canadian art. Fuller recognition for individual Canadian artists came with a series of retrospectives, each with important catalogues in which, for example, dimensions of works are for the first time regularly included. The first of these (for Emily Carr, 1945) was organized with the National Gallery of Canada. The Lawren Harris exhibition of 1948 was the Gallery's 'first attempt to organize a comprehensive exhibition of the work of a living artist.' This was followed soon after with retrospectives for other members of the Group of Seven.

Largely at the instigation of Lawren Harris, the Art Gallery of Toronto exhibited in April 1927 the collection of the Société Anonyme, a New York group under the aegis of Katherine Dreier. This was the Toronto public's first real exposure to abstract art and the outcry against the show was considerable. It was, however, a remarkable exhibition, containing works by Mondrian, Duchamp, Kandinsky, Joseph Stella, and virtually every modernist of distinction.

1927 was also marked by the appointment of Arthur Lismer as educational supervisor of the Gallery. In May of that year he arranged for a large travelling show of children's drawings and paintings of the students of Franz Cizek (1865-1946), the Viennese teacher and artist. Following Cizek's principles, Lismer organized his Saturday morning classes and later initiated the Art Centre for Children, whose regular exhibitions (Figs. 7, 8) were an important and distinctive part of Gallery life in the 1930s and 1940s.

In the 1950s three large-scale international circulating exhibitions, Art Treasures from the Vienna Collections (1951, Fig. 9), Dutch Painting, the Golden Age (1955), and British Painting in the Eighteenth Century (1958), were mounted at the Art Gallery; each of these had a tremendous and lasting popular appeal in the city. In December 1962, the exhibition Eugène Delacroix was shown; its catalogue, written by Professor Lee Johnson of the University of Toronto, was the first of a substantial scholarly nature to be published by the Gallery. In 1964, the actual number of exhibitions held at the Gallery was significantly reduced, although three of the shows that year were of international importance: Picasso and Man (catalogue by Jean Sutherland Boggs), Canaletto (catalogue by W.G. Constable), and Post-painterly Abstraction (circulated from the Los Angeles County Museum of Art).

Today's Gallery visitor is accustomed to the exhibition catalogue cum scholarly tome and to the leisurely pace afforded by the extended duration of exhibitions. Both, however, are relatively recent developments: the society annuals, which figured prominently in the exhibition programme for over fifty years, rarely extended beyond three weeks. With both the scale of exhibitions and their financial and organizational requirements on a correspondingly modest level, many others were installed for no more than a month and, occasionally, for as little as two weeks. Similarly modest were the 'monthly exhibition catalogues' first published in the 'twenties, comprising simple listings of three or four shows held concurrently. Not necessarily based on a particular aesthetic relationship, the combinations were often unexpected, as the 'combined catalogues' reflect a diversity of subject which would be difficult to equal today. In retrospect, they often demonstrated a sure historical sense of what should be shown: the April 1927 catalogue, for example, juxtaposed the controversial Société Anonyme with the Canadian Society of Graphic Art and some historical paintings and drawings by C.W. Jefferys. In the pre-war years and early 'forties, it should be recalled that the publication of a catalogue was the exception, the brief (typed) hanging-list the rule. In recent times, the exhibition lacking any kind of publication is almost unheard of, while installation times have gradually lengthened. In 1964, Picasso and Man was on view for five weeks and Post-painterly Abstraction for six. Even longer showings are now the norm.

The list of exhibitions which follows covers the year 1906 (first exhibition) to 1966 (adoption of the name Art Gallery of Ontario). It is based on the collection of exhibition catalogues and handlists maintained in the E.P. Taylor Reference Library, and on records (committee minutes, publicity scrapbooks, exhibition files) in the Archives of the Gallery. Entries are arranged chronologically by year and by opening date of each exhibition. Dates have been established as accurately as possible; the first full day of public access to each exhibition has been used as the opening date, rather than the date of the members' preview. In a few cases, precise dates could not be established. Exhibition titles are taken directly from their catalogues, or, if no catalogue was published, from handlists or archival records. Catalogues published by the Art Museum/Art Gallery of Toronto are given title and brief physical description only. Catalogues of travelling exhibitions published by other institutions, and catalogues of society exhibitions are listed with an imprint and physical description. Catalogues of exhibitions arranged in co-operation with other institutions are provided with a multiple imprint. Handlists are identified by an asterisk, indicating that no catalogue was published for those exhibitions, while exhibitions for which neither catalogue nor handlist exists are entered in square brackets. Only the annual summer installations of the permanent collection have been omitted from this list.

Exhibitions are indexed only from title-page information. The contents of catalogues and lists have not been analyzed; complete access is available through the Exhibitors' Finding Aid card index maintained in the E.P. Taylor Reference Library, Art Gallery of Ontario. Exhibitions lacking accompanying documentation are indexed from title information. Generic headings have been used only where unavoidable; exhibitions by artists' societies are not indexed by medium.
