The Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association, the oldest association operating in the insurance industry in North America, tracing its roots back more than a century, starting out in 1894 as the Canadian Life Managers Association representing a group of eight insurers. Today, the CLHIA speaks for 83 life and health insurance companies that serve more than 20 million policyholders across Canada and almost 10 million around the world.

The members of CLHIA are well capitalized, with a solid safety record. They are strong financial services competitors. Their assets in Canada total $179 billion and $316 billion worldwide. They provide about 90 per cent of the personal life and health insurance in force in Canada. They fund about 65 per cent of the pension plans in the Country. They invest approximately $175 billion in Canada on behalf of Canadian policyholders and annuity holders. They employ about 55,000 Canadians.
