Article abstract

Lisa Cay Miller is a pianist/composer/improviser and Artistic Director of the NOW Society. In this piece, she offers a poetic description of the technological challenges associated with a large-scale sequential improvisation project in which thirty-six musicians and two sound engineers collaborated with one another to produce a total of thirty-eight videos of improvised musical performances.

Time Folding • Folding Time

Lisa Cay Miller

Across the street became the same as across the world. This time changes time. Time borders become biological tickers in Prophetic Time. Calendar Time moves to “Clock time never . . . real” (Mendoza 211). Slow fast, peer not-reviewed Journal Time. Conspiracy Time pinging Lightning Time. Fourteen-day cycle Response Time, reflective predictive Before/After/Coming Time, epidemiological models, possibilities shaping orders. Witnessing professional uncertainty as certain, we watch scientists improvise.

Somatic Time, Trauma Time, the sped-up rush of realization dominos across oceans. Dissociative Time, pushing through confusion fog to stumble act. Martin Amis’s Times Arrow moving backward in Denial Time. Chronophobia, panic, depression, anxiety, Subjective Time as a first-time globally shared Psychological Time.

As healing-shifts move towards Ancestral Nature Time. Rising setting. Waxing waning. Growing Time. In nests and first-time flights, from peeps to rasps to full song. Circadian Time overtakes Work Day Time. A Time of Tasks, of making in limitation. We slow. Light behind branches, hand towel stitchings, birds passing, bumblebees burrowing, crows curious, noticed now.

Three Times at Once Time. Improviser/Channeler-Collaborator/Recaller-Composer/Anticipator. In folding time • time folding, improvising Emergent Putting Together Time¹ to the sounds of colleagues in your ears. Modelling in your mind what might be played by future partners, anticipate remembering of what could be. Future/past/present intention, in spite of the jolt of conditions. Overcoming reluctance to record in isolation, to play alone, to be one’s own technician, to balance coping and creating. Finding agency in capabilities and surprise in distant connection.

Musicians heard not having yet played, Creations appearing later. As Nicole Mitchell states: “And I see through my eyelids and trace the shapes into sonic threads” (231). Multi-directional, listen after, hear before, make today, make next week, and the next. A spatial generosity, forehear, memory hear, ego banished, reactive performance without response. The “musical environment created by the performance” (Bailey 103) not a “separate phenomenon, something really much stranger than the playing itself” (Cardew), but “of” the setting. Engineer architects built host houses of vertically stacked adjacent rooms, spanning cities, countries, continents, to hold our spirituality, our music, layered into films seen and will be seen many-times.

No hand claps, no before/after, introductions, pre/postambles. No public. Paramusical elements removed, the quotidian questioning rituals of the staging of the stage. Firetrucks passing, lawn mowers, neighbours talking and fridges starting burst into private studios. Music in solitude connecting not in real time and space (Bielawa 41), but in alone together temporal rooms.

Curatorial Time, chains of tasks, company-style (Bailey 133) groupings, 6 x 6, 3 x 12, mathematical sequencing for fair starts (everyone went first once). Weeks of long-term attention, gracious cooperation, in a risky unknown not done before four-month process. Preparing for what we don’t know is coming—curating so big it’s like hoarding—except the secured supply is an expression of collegial care for musical mental health. Back and forth, forward and back, forward and forward, back and back, a chain of support, challenges accepted and vulnerability given. Online workshops, lessons, live streams, zoom grids—valuable yet the grief elephant in every room—this was not that. Not a shadow but something new, enthusiastically relayed and suspended. Conditions made this form, not as innovation but as a way through.

Composed Time: two large ensemble pieces, as expressions of time, recorded in parts. “Bsinne,” pressing harmonic fields with isolated iterations combined, an immovable branch and changeable light. “Zeitfaltung • Time Folding • Folding Time,” improvisers articulating harmonic and melodic material to support never heard solos, the constant cry of the collective, holding everyone who could not be present, movingly, passionately, offering individual threads in cohesion woven by a hand towel five generations old.

In Sequence Time, binding/bonding. Where inhale/exhale passes across borders, connection should also be in Nation State Danger Time, Inequality Revealed Time. These circumstances will never return, yet the apart/connect birth of this form can continue to link musical minds. If the form is adopted, I ask that the actions and values be upheld—cross borders, cross divisions and dividers, uphold egalitarianism and agency. Support each other with care, Across Time, Through Time.

Creative Music Series #8

From March to June 2020, during the most intense period of lockdown and the uncertainty of the COVID-19 pandemic, thirty-eight artists collaborated through time folding / folding time. Isolated musicians improvised in their homes in sequence: files moved from musician to engineer, to the next musician, and so on . . . Improvisers created in the present, imagined what might come, and responded to what had occurred. Engineers layered the performances in stages, creating architectural master halls from the sonic and visual material of the musicians' locations to create thirty-six films. Two large ensemble films of new works were recorded individually. The passion, generosity, vulnerability, humour, and strength demonstrated in the films document artists transcending separation through collaboration.

The Improvised Works

Each group (listed alphabetically) created four trios and two sextets, recorded in different orders. The imagery was created by the musicians; video and sound editing was done by the engineers, Ron Ruiten and Sheldon Zaharko.

Group 1: Wilbert de Joode (bass), Peggy Lee (cello), Kevin Romain (drums), Elisa Thorn (harp), Lan Tung (erhu/Chinese violin and voice), and Jeff Younger (guitar).

Group 2: Alex Catona (cello), Ava Mendoza (guitar), Ada Rave (saxophone), Clyde Reed (bass), Cole Schmidt (guitar), and Dylan van der Schyff (drums and household objects).

Group 3: Róisín Adams (piano and Wurlitzer), Viviane Houle (voice), Anne La Berge (flute & kyma system), Balot Ne (drums), Cat Toren (piano), and Chloe Ziner (guitar).

Group 4: Parmela Attariwala (viola), Tommy Babin (bass), Aram Bajakian (guitar), Onno Govaert (drums), Melissa Hubert (flute & electronics), and Lisa Cay Miller (piano).

Group 5: Meredith Bates (violin), Ben Brown (household objects), Bruce Freedman (saxophone), Paul Plimley (piano), Ron Samworth (guitar), and Marta Warelis (piano, Rhodes, and synthesizer).

Group 6: Adrian Avendaño (drums), James Meger (bass), Andromeda Monk (no-input mixer), Karen Ng (saxophone), Jasper Stadhouders (guitar), and Joshua Zubot (violin).

Zietfaltung Time Folding • Folding time is inspired by a show towel made by Anna Lehman Huber (Hoover), the composer's great, great, great grandmother. The Handduch, made in 1824 in the Mennonite wedding tradition and style, was likely placed at the center of Anna's home. Mennonite show towels were individual creations, intricate works of embroidery requiring skill and practice.
