Our Contributors / Nos auteurs

Alisa Apostle is a doctoral candidate and instructor at Queen's University, working on a thesis that examines the cultural history of Canada's national tourism industry.

Megan J. Davies, a Wellcome research fellow at the Centre for the History of Medicine, University of Glasgow, has Canadian and Scottish research interests spanning a range of topics: rural medicine, old age, public health, social welfare and midwifery.

Marlene Epp is assistant professor of History and Peace & Conflict Studies at Conrad Grebel University College, University of Waterloo, Waterloo, Ontario. She is author of Women without Men: Mennonite Refugees of the Second World War (Toronto, 2000).

Lesley Erickson is a doctoral candidate at the University of Calgary. She has studied the interplay between ethnicity and gender in Swedish immigrants and has more recently completed a study of Sarah Riel and the Grey Nuns in the Canadian Northwest. She is currently working on an analysis of women, crime, and culture on the prairie.

Chad Gaffield is a professor of history and founding director of the Institute of Canadian Studies at the University of Ottawa. His research focusses on Canada's socio-cultural history during the later nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

Patrice Groulx est historien-conseil auprès d'organismes gouvernementaux et de firmes privées, ainsi que chargé de cours à l'Université Laval de Québec. Ses travaux portent en particulier sur l'historiographie, la diffusion de l'histoire, les commémorations sociopolitiques et les politiques patrimoniales.

Janice Harvey teaches history at Dawson College in Montreal. She has recently completed her doctoral dissertation on Protestant private charity in nineteenth-century Montreal.

Steven High is a SSHRC post-doctoral Fellow at Memorial University where he is working with Greg Kealey on a comparative study of the socio-economic effects of the 1940 “destroyers-for-bases” deal on Newfoundland, Bermuda, and the British Caribbean. His study Emptied Spaces: The Making of North America's Rust Belt, 1969-1984 will be published in late 2002.

Sandy Ramos has recently accepted a position as Archivist at the National Archives of Canada in Ottawa. She is completing her doctoral dissertation at Queen's University at Kingston on sexual violence in nineteenth-century Montreal.

Jarrett Rudy recently completed his doctorate at McGill University and is currently teaching at McGill and Concordia Universities. His research focuses on the social and cultural role of smoking in nineteenth- and twentieth-century Canada.
